You can use a file extension like.mp3 for your file to have an audio extension: I'm going to make an assumption you are using Windows, you know that exe stands for 'executable file' I don't know what Windows stands for so the link is me telling you that. For non-Windows users: An.exe file is an executable on the Windows operating system Have a look at this article: What Is The.exe File Extension? There are other types of files, but I'll let you know if you need to know: What Are All The File Extensions For? Q: Send data between stateless components (no Redux) I am trying to find a way to send data between two stateless components. For example, when the website gets redirected to a different page/component, data can be stored in localStorage and used to populate the page. The two components would be a login screen and the redirected page. Are there any best practices for doing this? Also, will this work with a good amount of javascript code loaded dynamically? I am using React and not Redux or even using sessionStorage. A: To share data between components you can use ref in react, if two components are parent and child, you can have a ref on the child component and access data by using `current.value`. Example :

class ChildComponent extends React.Component { state = { sentValue: " " } componentDidMount () { const vm = this.refs.myRef; vm.value = this.props.data; } render () { // You need to look at react-redux if you want to access values from parents
