Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an improved method of cooling or heating a storage device by water which circulates in the device without allowing water to flow outside the device. 2. Description of the Prior Art A wide variety of devices such as a data processing system employ a power supply, data storage device and a central processing unit. The power supply is usually connected to a main power source and converts the electrical current supplied from the main power source into a lower voltage. An inductor is connected to the power supply to supply a required current to the power supply. The data storage device is connected to a computer mainframe in which data are stored. The central processing unit is also connected to the computer mainframe. A cooling or heating device is also connected to the central processing unit. The central processing unit and the data storage device are cooled by the cooling or heating device. An example of such a device is shown in FIG. 1. FIG. 1 shows a block diagram of a conventional data processing system. The central processing unit (CPU), or data processor, 6 consists of a data processor section 11 and a logic section 12. The CPU 6 is connected to a memory section 7 which stores data, and a disk controller 9 which reads data and transfers data to be stored to a data storage device 8. The CPU 6 is connected to the logic section 12 through a data bus in which data to be processed are transferred. The logic section 12 is connected to a peripheral section 10 and a timer 15 through a system bus. The peripheral section 10 performs an input/output operation with peripheral units connected to the data bus. The timer 15 performs time measurement and control. The clock signal of the timer 15 is supplied to the CPU 6 through the system bus and inputted through an input terminal T.sub.IN to a peripheral logic section 14 through a clock receiving terminal T.sub.CLK. A decoder 16 receives a logical combination of a number of signal inputted from the logic section 14 through input terminals T.sub.IN. The decoder 16 extracts a specific signal corresponding to a specific logic function.
