The same day, fifteen-year-old George Anthony Rios, Jr., also of Folsom, walked into the same cafeteria in the same town. As it happens, both men brought guns with them that day. They had no intention of committing murder, but both were dazed and confused by their anger, and they just went with it. Johnson shot and killed Rios in front of students, teachers, and cafeteria workers. Johnson then walked into the principal's office and shot the principal, killing him. The next morning, Johnson went to the student's home and shot and killed his mother. In the panic, the police arrested Johnson for these crimes, but not before he had committed an additional six murders. At one point, Johnson had forced a college student at the high school to pull the trigger for him. Johnson was convicted for the murder of Rios and the murder of the principal and, at age nineteen, was sent to the California Youth Authority. The jury convicted George Rios for seven counts of special circumstance murder and two counts of murder and sentenced him to death. In Rios v. California (1994), the California Supreme Court granted him a new trial. In June 1996, however, a new jury convicted Rios for seven counts of first degree murder, two counts of attempted murder, and one count of assault with a firearm. George Rios, Jr. was convicted of four counts of murder and four counts of attempted murder and sentenced to life imprisonment. During the penalty phase, the prosecutor was able to introduce evidence that Johnson and Rios had killed approximately twenty people, making this one of the most horrific crimes in the history of the state. The jury, after considering a wide range of evidence in mitigation, unanimously imposed the death penalty, sparing Johnson and Rios from being put to death by the state. Instead, the two men have been serving life in prison. Johnson's lawyer was C.J. Moeller, a noted capital defense attorney who has represented notorious criminals including Robert Alton Harris, Russell Lloyd, and Adolf Hitler's son, Eric Rudolph. In his opening statement, Moeller
