A passenger whose pilot crashed a plane, killing six and injuring 19 others, planned to make a new life in Germany, authorities said, after he was shot and detained by police in Washington state. Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Allen Kenitzer said Ryan Bounds, 23, of Kelso, Washington, was aboard an empty Boeing 737 that crashed shortly after takeoff from SeaTac, Washington, on Saturday morning. He said Bounds had tried to turn himself in to Seattle-Tacoma International Airport police officers but was shot when he wouldn't put down his gun. Kenitzer said Bounds planned to travel to Germany and not return to the United States. "He had the same itinerary, but we are unable to confirm if that is still the case," he said. Bounds' plane went down a half mile east of Seattle-Tacoma International Airport, where a jet crashed a few months ago that also had a history of problems, but where an FAA inspection found no problems. The incident comes at a time of heightened concerns about the nation's aviation industry, as pilots struggle with an aging fleet, ballooning costs and the complexity of new electronic systems. Three of the people killed were employees of Atlas Air Worldwide Holdings Inc. They included the president of Atlas' cargo unit, chief operating officer and chief executive officer. No one on the ground was injured, authorities said. Kenitzer said he didn't know whether Bounds had been shot in the back or on the front of his body. The other three passengers were employees of the Seattle firm which was operating the flight. Bounds was being held in Pierce County, Washington, but had not been charged in the plane crash. The National Transportation Safety Board said it is sending a team to investigate the cause of the crash. The FAA and National Transportation Safety Board would lead the probe and contribute experts to the investigation. A preliminary report from the NTSB could take months to complete, and several probes are being conducted into the crash of the same type of aircraft, Boeing 737-800, that recently crashed in Indonesia
