Arduino? My project involves a cellphone controlled remote. It's going to control some simple switches and an AC motor. So I need to be able to connect the cellphone with a switch or a motor. I have the Atmel USB2070 chip and I'm trying to make a PCB with a serial interface on the UART. I need to connect the AC motor and the switch to the computer.

As you know, from the cellphone to the Atmel chip, there is a connector called OTG. It provides a mini USB. But, I don't know if this mini USB provides an antenna to connect the cellular to my Atmel chip. Where can I find an antenna small and cheap for the Arduino?

A: You can use a Mini USB to USB A cable to connect the cellphone to the Atmel chip. You need to make sure that the USB is in host mode. The mini USB to USB A cable will cost around 5$. You can use the cellphone to control the Arduino without any problems. If the cellphone has antenna you can use it without any problems, but, if the cellphone doesn't have antenna you will need an external one. Q: Do I need to worry about my email getting read by the sender? While writing this question, I realized that I have to do some user behavior studies of my e-mail user experience for a computer science class I'm taking. I'm mostly focused on the server and client side. I'm more concerned about my company getting hacked, than I am about what's going to happen to me in jail. I use Microsoft Outlook as my e-mail client. I use Gmail as my e-mail server. It's set up so that every Gmail message that arrives in my mailbox I get sent to a file in my desktop, with the original e-mail and the attachments. I did this so that I can save money on my data usage. My question is, does it really matter to my company (as long as I do my job and send emails) if I somehow
