When the user clicks on one of the items I want to pass the item that was clicked to the function below. var CheckedList = (sender, e) => { var ListVM = (sender as ListView).ItemContainerGenerator.ContainerFromIndex(e.Index); return ListVM.DataContext; }; The problem I am having is that sender is not the listview but the listview's button. how do I get the button that was clicked so that I can use its DataContext. A: So you are binding to a button. When you click the button, a click event is raised on the ListView which is then handled by the ListView. The ListView internally calls the ICollectionView.ItemContainerGenerator.ContainerFromIndex(int) method. This method creates a visual element that displays an element of the view and in your case it's a ListViewItem (which has a Button in it). The sender parameter you see on the click event is of type ListViewItem, so you just cast it as Button: Button button = (Button)sender; var ListVM = (sender as ListViewItem).DataContext; This also means that you could also pass the ListViewItem, if the Button is a direct child of it: var ListVM = (sender as ListViewItem).DataContext; A: Try this: var CheckedList = (sender, e) => { var ListVM = (sender as ListView).ItemContainerGenerator.ContainerFromItem(e.Item); return ListVM.DataContext; }; White Button (short film) White Button is a short comedy directed by Chris Stone and written by Stone and 2d92ce491b
