FAQS for DAVEVUS WAVELAB PRO 9.5.The radiation dose to patients undergoing computed tomography of the chest. To measure the radiation dose to patients undergoing computed tomography of the chest, and to assess the effect of standardizing the method of patient exposure. Data on patient exposure during computed tomography of the chest, in a wide range of examinations, were collected from eight different hospitals throughout Great Britain. The average radiation dose per examination, and the contribution from different scanning techniques, were derived by taking into account the numbers of examinations performed, the patient population and the scanning equipment. The dose in excess of background was measured at the patient's skin. A wide variation was found in the dose to patients undergoing computed tomography of the chest, varying from 0.05 to 59.0 mSv (0.06-59.4 microSv). There was a significant variation in the level of the patient's skin dose

(range 0.1-14.4 mSv, 0.1-14.5 microSv). The variance in the dose was largely attributable to differences in equipment and scanning technique between hospitals. To achieve a desired radiation dose to the patient, the dose-time product should be minimized. The dose in excess of background in an adult undergoing computed tomography of the chest, at different sites, is in the range 0.1-10 microSv. The doses recorded here are considerably higher than those received from standard radiography. This study shows that dose-time product reduction in computed tomography of the chest will not only reduce the risk of cancer, but will also reduce the risk of skin damage. It is also important to consider the dose to staff members, particularly if the patient is exposed for a prolonged period.ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. -- A blizzard warning is in effect
