What's New In?

Ultra Ping Pro is a set of useful tools that let you ping either a single IP or a whole range, trace routes or perform a whois with minimum configuration options. The program is very easy to use, mostly thanks to the interface and its tabbed layout that separates every single feature and provides dedicated options for each of them. Pinging an IP for instance is just as easy as writing down the IP address, while an entire IP range can be pinged through a separate tab. This time however you need to provide both the starting and the ending IPs, while a log panel at the bottom of the window lets you analyze the results and the stats. On the other hand, if you wish to trace routes, you have nothing else to do than to provide the hostname or the IP, while Ultra Ping Pro takes care of the rest of the job. The difference is that this time Ultra Ping Pro also allows users to define the IP address, number of packets and packet size, and the results are again displayed in a dedicated panel in the same window. There is no documentation available, although a help section does exist, which means beginners who install the application may have a hard time trying to figure out how to use it. The good thing is that Ultra Ping Pro remains a very intuitive program, while running on low resources. It crashes however on Windows 7 every once in a while, so it's better to use it on Windows XP workstations. All in all, Ultra Ping Pro is a handy product with very simple utilities that let you ping a host or trace routes with minimum effort.
