Vacuum-assisted closure of chronic osteomyelitis of the calcaneus. The success of Achilles tendon allograft for the treatment of infected calcaneal osteomyelitis was reported. However, for an adequate exposure of the osseous defect, internal fixation is needed. Open calcaneal reconstruction and extensive debridement of infected osteomyelitis with adequate debridement and prolonged management are difficult. We used a vacuum-assisted closure (VAC) system in 2 patients and obtained satisfactory results without internal fixation or amputation. Both patients had calcaneal osteomyelitis with an open wound but intact Achilles tendon and no phlegmon. A VAC system was placed over the defect and connected to a negative pressure source. This system greatly enhanced granulation tissue and was helpful for overcoming the fracture of bone edges. The patients' wounds were healed after 40 and 55 days, respectively. The VAC system was useful for the treatment of an infected calcaneal fracture and achieved a good therapeutic result without internal fixation or amputation.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to electro-optical devices and materials having electro-optical functions such as liquid crystal materials, an electroluminescence (EL) element, plasma display materials, and materials for use in a photoelectric conversion element for sensors and the like. 2. Description of the Related Art

The electro-optical materials are broadly classified into inorganic and organic materials. Among them, inorganic materials have attracted attention as liquid crystal materials for displays and the like in recent years. For example, for the liquid crystal materials, it has been reported that inorganic materials include a chiral smectic liquid crystal which is made of an optically active compound such as ferroelectric liquid crystals or antiferroelectric liquid crystals and has ferroelectricity, antiferroelectricity, ferroelectricity or antiferroelectricity that is induced by the application of an electric field. However, use of an inorganic material for a liquid crystal material is limited to only thin-film devices and the like. In contrast, because of the advantages that a liquid crystal material does not cause environmental pollution and is large in optical anisotropy e24f408de9
