During a flight from PDX to CDG about 6.5 hours into the flight, I noticed something that made me wonder if it was significant. During the flight I logged data traffic on my Android phone. The flight tracking data was fairly standard but in the time frame of around 4 minutes, I noticed a spike of about 400Kbps of wireless data traffic. I'm not sure how to interpret this but I know it was from a low earth orbit satellite. What is it? Was it a mistake? A: It is most likely something internal to the aircraft. It is pretty common for the aircraft to record data traffic from the various satellite tracking systems in the cockpit. It is also possible that if there is a malfunction in the satellite tracking systems,
