Fine needle aspiration biopsy of the prostate using an automated sample processing system. To prospectively evaluate the sensitivity and specificity of fine needle aspiration biopsy (FNAB) of the prostate using an automated sample processor. A retrospective review of our database of FNAB of the prostate with diagnosis of benign versus malignant disease was performed. All patients underwent repeat cystourethroscopy and were followed for a minimum of one year. All patients who underwent FNAB of the prostate using an automated processor (ProCyt; Cytoc Corp, Boxborough, MA) during the study period were prospectively evaluated. Prostate-specific antigen (PSA) measurements were obtained in all patients after the initial procedure and every 3 months for one year. FNAB of the prostate performed with an automated processor was 100% sensitive (50% specificity) for the diagnosis of malignancy. The sensitivity and specificity of FNAB
