Although stimulation of the D2R is well documented to promote cell survival and inhibit cell apoptosis, the precise function of CaM in D2R signaling is unclear and has not been sufficiently explored. A body of evidence, including our recent finding of the D2R/CaM heterodimer, demonstrates that the D2R interacts with calmodulin-like Ca²⁺ sensor protein (CaMLP), thereby activating CaMLP Ca²⁺/CaM-dependent kinase (CaMKII) activity. A direct link has been established between CaMKII-dependent signaling and neurodegenerative disorders including Parkinson's and Alzheimer's diseases. However, whether the CaM-dependent CaMKII activity has any role in the D2R signaling remains unknown. The hypothesis that calmodulin-dependent signaling in the D2R affects Parkinson's disease models has never been addressed. The following three specific aims will examine the D2R's ability to activate CaM-dependent signaling and the consequence of D2R activation on signaling and apoptosis. Aim I is to assess the hypothesis that CaM regulates D2R activity by feedback inhibition and by sequestration of D2R by CaM. For this aim, we will first show that the CaM-binding and autoinhibitory properties of the D2R are essential for D2R activation by CaM. Then, we will determine the CaMKII activation and the apoptotic effect of the D2R after the inhibition of CaM. Aim II will focus on the identification of calmodulin-binding and autoinhibitory domains of the D2R and characterization of calmodulin's role in the D2R-mediated signaling. For this aim, we will prepare and use deletion mutants of the D2R, which will be expressed in PTB-tagged cells. Finally, we will investigate whether the activation of CaM affects D2R signaling and the apoptotic effect of the D2R. Aim III will focus on the identification of CaM interaction proteins of the D2R. For this aim, we will

Copy In Order

Select source and destination folders, choose the copying rules, and initiate the operation from the main window. [wp_ad_camp_3] Download The Deft App Copy Folder Tree is an open source Windows script that allows a user to copy a tree of folders and subfolders (they are specified by folder names) to a defined destination in a specific order. Besides copying, it can be used to make "Backup with rename" folders, and to do it in a specific order. Start working easily. Simply drag folders or files from your computer to the program. Use the context menu to specify different options for each file and perform the desired operation. The script recognizes the actions you perform during the process and makes them by default, without requiring you to modify each step manually. The process of copying works automatically with a preview window. The entire operation is clearly displayed. You can also easily copy more than one file or folder at a time. Flexible Configurations. You can set the destination folder, modify the order of operation (the way the files are copied), and specify different rules for each file. You can also set a date for each operation. All of these options can be configured through a simple interface. Directory Tree. The script is able to differentiate files and folders by their name, providing an intuitive interface. At any time, you can manually change the folder name in each file. Boot Menu. The program automatically adds files or folders you copy to a list of those you wish to keep. Batch File. You can specify a copy command in the specified command line. In this way, it is possible to add the task to the Windows task manager. Alternatively, you can define a batch file with the desired parameters to start directly from the program. Copies without Batch. With the selected configuration option, Copy Folder Tree is able to copy a single file or a single folder without creating a batch file. System Requirements: Windows XP and later Java 1.7 or later Installation and Setup: Copy Folder Tree does not require installation. Simply download the executable file and double click it, in order to start using the application.
