Rheumatoid arthritis (RA) is an autoimmune disease characterized by chronic inflammation and joint destruction. The aim of this review was to examine and summarize the available evidence on the effect of vaccines on RA. Medline and Embase databases were searched for original studies assessing the effect of vaccines in RA. Vaccines were categorized as disease modifying antirheumatic drugs (DMARDs), biologic drugs, and the combination of both. In total, 32 articles fulfilled the inclusion criteria and were analyzed. Only a small number of studies demonstrated a beneficial effect of vaccination in RA. A majority of studies investigated DMARDs. Trials investigating DMARDs were most often relatively small, and there were many different types of DMARDs and vaccine types investigated. Only one published study investigated vaccination with a biologic drug. Most published data on vaccination in RA are small and it is not possible to draw conclusions on the effect of vaccination in RA. The only clear finding is that the vaccination effect is to some extent linked to the anti-TNF effect. Additional controlled studies with vaccination in RA are warranted, in particular those focusing on specific immunologic features, such as the subgroups of patients with RA in need of therapy with biologic drugs.Q: Java Swing timer to set the color of a label I'm trying to set the color of a JLabel

System Requirements:

There are a few things that you'll want to make sure your system can handle. First, your GPU needs to support DirectX 12. DirectX 12 is, at its core, a graphics API. It requires a GPU that can handle the features it provides. Next, make sure your system supports multi-core processing. Graphics rendering requires the multi-core processing of multiple CPU cores. If you have a single-core, single-threaded CPU then it is a possibility that the GPU does not have enough power to handle the effects of a modern game.
