cell transplantation for children with acute lymphoblastic leukemia. The effectiveness of haploidentical (haplo-HSCT) stem cell transplantation (SCT) for children with acute lymphoblastic leukemia (ALL) has not been well characterized. We analyzed children who underwent haplo-HSCT at The University of Pennsylvania between 2007 and 2011. Clinical features, conditioning, graft source and cell source, and graft-versus-host disease (GVHD) treatment were evaluated. Thirty-four children (median age, 5.6 years; range, 1.3-17.3 years) received haplo-HSCT for B-ALL (n = 24) or T-ALL (n = 10). Acute GVHD developed in 11 children, and chronic GVHD developed in 19 children. Nonrelapse mortality (NRM) was 4.7% (2/43), and disease-free survival (DFS) was 70% (28/40). Sixteen of 28 patients who survived > 100 days showed full donor chimerism. Sixteen of 19 children who received peripheral blood as stem cell graft showed NRM, and 1 of 17 patients who received bone marrow as stem cell graft showed NRM. These findings suggest that haplo-HSCT is a valid treatment option for children with ALL who do not have human leukocyte antigen (HL
