Today I tried to install a Raspbian Wheezy image to the SD card, but it could not initialize my monitor. Instead I got a black screen with a blinking cursor. After 10 minutes it went to a blue screen for half a second, then back to the black screen again with a blinking cursor, and a lot of harddrive activity. What do I need to do to get my Raspberry PI to play nice with my monitor? A: I figured out what was happening. This seems to be a known problem with some laptops, since new proprietary drivers are not automatically released by the laptop's manufactorer. The usual solution is to use Ubuntu instead of Raspbian, since in Ubuntu you install the proprietary video driver directly from the GUI. Q: How to update the layout of a textfield, based on it's value I have a textfield which takes in a value, and that value determines how I should display a list of items. Say, I have a list of items, they all have some basic properties like name, price, and quantity. By clicking the display button, I can display the price of those items on the display. Based on the value I choose, I want to change the font size of the price, or the font color of the name. I'm using a layout that looks like this: (source: goosys.org) However, it looks like the changes I'm making, are not saved, so if I'm clicking the button when I change the font size, the font size does not remain the way it was. Here's the code of the class that I'm using to set up the display

With a simple interface and a mass of features, Saola Animate is a great application. Used to produce HTML5 animations, you can use a huge array of objects and objects properties, including color, size, and more. Character animation, text, images, and HTML widgets, as well as music, are all included. Interactivity is a big deal for you, but no coding is required. Just fill the canvas and adjust properties, and the application takes care of keyframe placement. In addition to basic editing, you can work with multiple scenes and also the timeline editor. Developer Information Maintained by: User Accessible Resource (UAR) It's about time I acknowledged how good (in a way) Firefox has improved. I've been using it in the past but I've been waiting for a good reason to upgrade. So far, that reason has come in the form of the much anticipated dark theme. Admittedly, when I read about this I was concerned that it'd be like converting my computer to green but after two days of use I can honestly say that it isn't. To install it (and there's a slight tweak to make it work with extensions), go to about:config and set the theme.dark (or whatever you want to call it) key to 1. I'm not sure what the default is but it doesn't seem to make any difference to anything else. The result is a darker website that is much more appealing to my eyes. Yes, there are still some issues, particularly with bookmarks (it displays the names as icons) but the blacker-is-better trend is good to see. Not that black doesn't look good but it needs a little tweaking to be pretty. Overall, it's a welcomed change and I look forward to using it.The Best RV Storage Companies Jul 22, 2018 When it comes to storing a recreational vehicle, you have to find the most compatible storage facility available to you. It has long been a dilemma whether to rent space, a storage unit, or a dealership. These are three very different options, and one will work best for you. Rent a Storage Unit If you have a recently purchased recreational vehicle, or just a recreational vehicle that you don't use that often, a storage unit is the best option. You will find a storage

System Requirements For Saola Animate:

Rift Veterans RIFT has been in the open beta stage for a long time, and although I love the game, I don't have much time to play it. It's constantly on my radar, but there are several games that I simply must play. After months of playing other games, I finally have the time to fully dive into Rift. As you may expect, it's a pretty big jump, and there's quite a few things to get comfortable with. In this article, I'll share what I�
