.21. Analysis of Option II: Reinforcing We use property inspection techniques such as Passive Infrared (PIR) detectors, Proximity Detection Sensors (PDS), or a combination of the two. PIR detectors are usually ceiling mounted., glass smoke detectors, and even motion-activated monitoring cameras. These devices are not used to replace structural or seismic elements. Figure 16. The population of Harwich as a whole, including the outlying settlement of Scalby, is 39,885 in 2011. The town is within the unitary authority of Thurrock, and shares some of its characteristics but has distinct individual identity. Geography The large harbour, which is a popular fishing port, is situated in the Harwich Haven; the entrance to the channel is protected by the North Harwich Lighthouse, which is the tallest square tower lighthouse in the UK. It was constructed between 1855–57 to replace an earlier tower, and its unusual design is that the two square, first-order, zig-zag channel entries are directly over the path of the flood tides, which are higher and cause greater tidal surges than further south; the final, single-storey entrance block lies to the north. The lighthouse was automated in 1975, and remained in this state until 1996, when it was rededicated as the North Harwich Lifeboat Station. In 2003, the new black-painted tower was built on the original site and is operational. It is high, the tallest lighthouse in the UK. Harwich's coastline provides a natural harbour, and the land has been used to cultivate many crops, particularly grains. This has generated trade in the local and surrounding area, with the town building on a long, unbroken history of maritime commerce. The port is one of the safest places to moor in the Essex Coast and has been used by many large ocean-going ships throughout the centuries. History The estuary and coastline that now constitute Harwich were much the same as in Roman times. Settlements such as Donyland, and the Er 1cb139a0ed
