VoIP simply means Voice over Internet Protocol and, as the name suggests, allows you to make phone calls over the Internet instead of using the regular telephone network. There are several reasons why VoIP has been a subject of constant debate and research in recent years. The important factor is that IP-based phone calls will almost always cost much less than regular phone calls. Moreover, the quality of VoIP calls, although not as excellent as those made through traditional services, is significantly better than the quality of telephone calls made through normal lines. There are several reasons for this - VoIP calls usually travel over much faster networks, as compared to a normal telephone call which requires the switching of voice data through several telephone networks over a certain period of time. If
